Youth Caught For Anti-Jewish Acts, Bigots Free

A warning that while some teenagers had been arrested for recent anti-Semitic acts, "seasoned" bigots ready to strike again may have escaped, has been voiced by a spokesman of the World Jewish Congress. The charge was made by Dr. Maurice L. Perlzweig, director of the World Jewish Congress department of international affairs, in an address to a committee of the United Nations Economic and Social Council. It was the second approach of the World Jewish Congress to the United Nations in connection with the wave of anti-Semitic incidents touched off by the daubing of a Cologne synagogue last Christmas.

Samuel Bronfman, of Montreal, chairman of the W.J.C.'s North American executive committee, stated that a fact sheet submitted to the United Nations Secretary-General showed that the global wave involved between 2,000 and 2,500 incidents in 41 countries. Dr. Perlzweig told the United Nations that Uruguayan police action, following synagogue bomb attempts in Montevideo, had revealed the existence of a Latin American anti-Semitic organization with a list of "Jewish and liberal institutions to be attacked."

In his statement, Dr. Perlzweig said that W.J.C. inquiries showed that the "great majority" of the incidents in the global wave of anti-Semitism "have not yet been traced to their perpetrators. The fact that of those apprehended many are adolescents may result in a wholly distorted view of the problem. It is reasonable to suppose that inexperienced youths will be caught while seasoned conspirators, trained in the school of international Nazi conspiracy, will elude anything short of a sustained and energetic effort of security authorities."

Dr. Perlzweig emphasized that it "would be a serious error" if efforts to hunt down the perpetrators were now closed, for, although the wave had subsided, "the factors behind it remain below the surface ready at any time to go into action again." The World Jewish Congress leader cited recent attempts to bomb three

Was A Founder Of Art Colony, Noted For Portraits

Ernest L. Blumenschein, artist, noted for his portraits, died in a sanitarium in Albuquerque, New Mexico, after an illness of two years. His age was 86 years.

Mr. Blumenschein, a resident of Taos for many years, was chiefly known in the Nineteen Hundreds as an illustrator for Century, Scribner's, McClure's, Harper's and other leading magazines in New York, says the New York Times. Since then he had been engaged for the most part in portraiture.

His work has been on display at many leading museums. These include the Metropolitan Museum of Art, in New York; the Los Angeles Museum of History and Science; the National Museum of Washington, the Brooklyn Museum; the Toronto Gallery of Art; and the Museum of Modern Art, in New York.

Mr. Blumenschein was a founder of the art colony at Taos, New Mexico, and during the Nineteen Twenties much of his New Mexican landscape work was shown in special exhibitions in New York. Noted among these pictures were "Sangre de Cristo Mountains," which was the feature of the Vanderbilt Gallery exhibition of 1925 and received the Altman Prize.

In 1927 his collection of stark, rugged scenes of mountain and desert drew much attention in a showing at the Grand Central Art Galleries in New York. Two years later his "Adobe Village in Winter" won the $1,000 Frank C. Logan Prize at an exhibition at the same galleries.

Mr. Blumenschein won the Isidor Portrait Prize of New York's Salmagundi Club in 1910, 1911, and 1931; the Beck Prize of the Philadelphia Water-Color Exhibition, in 1910; the Isidor Gold Medal for composition, of the National Academy of Design, in 1910, and the Potter Palmer Gold Medal of the Chicago Art Institute in 1917.

He was born in Pittsburgh and started as a student of the violin at Cincinnati College of Music. He then went to the Art Students League in New York and the Académie Julien in Paris, says the

Rabbi Says Equality Of Jew In Soviet Is Fraud, Anti-Semitism Is Rife

Dr. Nelson Glueck, president of the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, warned the recent convention of Reform rabbis, at Detroit, Mich., against permitting the "getting and giving of money" to become the major premise in community life.

Dr. Glueck addressed a Sabbath service in Temple Beth El that ended the seventy-first annual convention of the Central Conference of American Rabbis. The business sessions were held at the Sheraton Cadillac Hotel, says the New York Times.

The educator also took issue with "every kind of vague humanitarianism and well-fed sentimentality when these tend to supplant the restless search for truth and the realistic implementation of the imperatives of our faith."

Reminding the rabbis, nearly half of whom had studied under him, that the primary task of a rabbinical leader is to be an unhampered "companion and comforter," Dr. Glueck said that those who attend synagogues "want more than communal activities."

He emphasized that his argument was not against hospitals and universities or brotherhood and good-will endeavors as such, but only against these when they "become mere postures and are considered ends in themselves."

"It is a task of tremendous delicacy for the rabbi to make our intellectual tradition widespread without thinning it out into meaningless generalities and superficialities," Dr. Glueck declared.

"It is a trial to the rabbi's patience to contend with lethargy or indifference, yet I am persuaded that there is a hunger within our people for knowledge, a hunger for deep knowledge of the ideas of Judaism, for the essential philosophy of our faith.

"There is a burning desire among them for intellectual re-Judaization, to know why they are and should remain Jews, and how they and their children can find in Judaism the spiritual strength that all human beings so elementally require."

Dr. Glueck paid warm tribute in his address to Rabbi Isaac Mayer Wise, founder of Reform Judaism and Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, who contributed much to its development, says the New York Times.

These men, he said, "fought for a free but fully informed Judaism in a free synagogue and they fought for the uninhibited right to interpret and re-interpret Judaism in accordance with the maximum demands of its moral mandates."

At a special symposium the Rev. Dr. Max Schenk, Rabbi of Congregation Shaari Zedek, in Brooklyn, N. Y., reported on his recent trip to the Soviet Union.

"The equality of status of the Jew and the elimination of discrimination or anti-Semitism, so blatantly proclaimed by the revolution and written into the constitution, is a fraud and a lie," he asserted.

"Anti-Semitic remarks are no longer punished, and anti-Semitism is rife. Today there is only one synagogue in Moscow and three small prayer rooms for 500,000 Jews. Kiev and Leningrad each have one synagogue for some 300,000 Jews in each city."

The Central Conference of American Rabbis voiced its unanimous opposition to the practice of reading the Bible for devotional purposes in public schools.

Whether mandatory or permissive, whether pupils are required to attend or whether they may be excused on requests by their parents, the practice "clearly constitutes an introduction of religion into state-supported educational institutions," the rabbis declared.

The 500 rabbinical leaders of some million Reform Jews further asserted that "to read the Bible without comment, as required by existing law in many states, is to reduce to a mechanical routine what should be a meaningful experience."

"The reading of any particular Bible translation," the conference declared, according to the New York Times, "even if recited without comment, introduces sectarian interpretation and would violate the religious conscience of some of the children."

The rabbis also went on record in opposition to released-time religious instruction. They called the custom of permitting public school children to take time off for religious education "a usurpation by the state of a responsibility which only the church, synagogue, and home can properly fulfill."

Despite the sanction of limited released-time programs by the Supreme Court, the conference asserted that religion as presented under the "aegis" of the public school "cannot be satisfactorily taught."

The statement continued: "At a time when the public school is being seriously challenged to lead its expanding curriculum responsibilities, objections have been raised to the use of public-school time for religious education.

"By insisting that school time be made available for religious instruction, the proponents of released time would appear to be enlisting the support of the state.

"This practice of manipulating state support for sectarian religious purposes is fraught with danger. Moreover, the practice of dividing children into religious groupings as they prepare to leave for their released time class is a likely cause of intergroup tension and as such, a violation of the spirit of the American public school.

"In our judgment, religious groups are well advised to forego the dubious benefits of state support and to conduct their religious education programs through the church, or synagogue and the home, says the New York Times. Where released-time programs are now in operation, we counsel our members not to participate."

An earlier statement reaffirmed the Conference's adherence to the principle of the separation of church and state. The Central Conference of American Rabbis voiced the hope that Adolph Eichmann would be accorded "every measure of justice."

Eichmann, who headed the Jewish section of Hitler's Gestapo, is accused of having supervised the extermination of 6,000,000 Jews. He is awaiting trial in Israel after having been apprehended in Argentina.

The group passed a resolution stating:

"We are confident that as he (Eichmann) stands trial he will be accorded every measure of justice. We trust that his apprehension will serve as an incentive to the nations of the world to ferret out with alacrity and zeal those remaining perpetrators of crimes against humanity who are still regrettably at large, some of whom are even now under the protection of the various countries in which they reside."

The conference tabled a paragraph asking that Eichmann be spared the death penalty if found guilty. The action was taken on the ground that the Conference had already gone on record as opposing capital punishment.

The conference also called on President Eisenhower to review the case of Morton Sobell, who was convicted nine years ago in an espionage conspiracy. He was sentenced to thirty years in prison.

Another resolution asked for the abolition of the House Committee on Un-American Activities and a return of its functions to the Judiciary Committee.

Later, the Rev. Dr. Bernard J. Bamberger, rabbi of Congregation Shaaray Tefila, New York, was re-elected president of the conference and the Rev. Dr. Albert G. Minda of Temple Israel, Minneapolis, vice president. Dr. Minda will automatically become president next year, says the New York Times.

The rabbis heard a report that the incidence of intermarriage among Jews in the United States was low compared with other religious groups but was slowly increasing.

Reporting to a convention seminar on intermarriage, Rabbi Bernard Kligfeld, of Long Beach, L. I., N. Y., said the rate of Jewish intermarriage in the United States was about 7 per cent.

Available figures, Rabbi Kligfeld said, reveal a slight tendency to increase. By contrast, he asserted, half of all Roman Catholics marry non-Catholics.

Z.O.A. Leader Rejects Claim Of No Jewish Vote

Dr. Emanuel Neumann, honorary president of the Zionist Organization of America, and member of the Jewish Agency Executive, termed assertions by some Jewish spokesmen that "there is no Jewish vote" as "inaccurate and misleading." The Zionist leader asserted that "the Jewish vote is an unorganized but potent reality," and that "American Jews are in this respect no different than other groups of citizens making up the American electorate."

Dr. Neumann spoke at a reception tendered him by the Zionist Organization of America at the Hotel Pierre, in New York, on the occasion of his recent return from plenary meetings of the Jewish Agency Executive in Jerusalem, and the European Conference of General Zionists held in Antwerp, Belgium. Dr. Neumann, as president of the World Confederation of General Zionists, also visited other European countries where he conferred with top leaders of Zionist Organizations.

Speaking on the issues of the current American election campaign, Dr. Neumann said: "Recently, as in other election years, some Jewish spokesman have announced to the world that there is no Jewish vote. It baffles me to understand why such gratuitous

Eban, Israel Education Minister, Has Complex Job

Abba Eban, Israel's former representative to the United Nations and Ambassador to Washington, who was appointed Israeli Minister of Education, Premier David Ben-Gurion having held the portfolio since April, joined the Cabinet in December as a minister without portfolio.

As Minister of Education he will assume one of the most challenging jobs in the administration, says the New York Times. Education is a more complex and delicate matter in Israel than in other countries, mainly because of the diverse ethnical and cultural backgrounds of the immigrants.

Immigration has caused an increase in the school population from 130,000 to 600,000 in twelve years. Free compulsory elementary schooling for children six to 14 years of age was instituted to educate the new generation. The children from under-developed Oriental communities in Asia and Africa, however, have not been able to keep up with those from Europe and only a few of them continued through high school.

Responsible Israelis are distressed by this situation, which threatens to divide the rising generation into unskilled workers from oriental ethnic groups and leaders and technicians from groups of Western origin.

● Sydney Stavitsky, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Stavitsky, 21 Cuthbert Street, and editor of the "Clark Street Sun", was presented with a plaque, by David Shacter, grand secretary, and Harry Shucker, social service chairman, of the Grand Lodge Knights of Pythias, for his achievement in helping to combat juvenile delinquency, on August 18, at the bandstand at Fletcher's Field.

● Anyone visiting St. Alban's, Vermont, is invited to attend services by a group of Montrealers who bought land, built homes, bought boats, and fish and swim. For religious services a sefer Torah was loaned to them by the St. Alban's Synagogue. Moe Gurevitch, 8568 Outremont Avenue, and David Goodenday, 5395 Cavendish Avenue, Montreal, made an Aron Hakodesh (Ark). Services are held all season at the summer home of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Sheffren, 8017 De L'Acadie Avenue, Montreal, with Bill Sheffren, 2795 Ekers Avenue, acting as Cantor. Eddy Fagen, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Fagen, 7540 Stuart Avenue, chanted Mafter in this little "shul". Services are held every Sabbath from April to October, with Kiddush supplied by a different home-owner each week. Mr. and Mrs. Ben Fagen, 8010 Birnam Avenue; Samuel Fagen and Max Fagen, 7542 Birnam Avenue; Mr. and Mrs. Wolfe Steinberg, 580 Fraser Avenue; are among the congregation.

● Gary Luxton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Luxton, 1597 Ducharme Avenue, came first in the Province of Quebec High School Leaving Examinations with 964 marks, and topped the previous record. He will enter McGill University Faculty of Science in the fall. At Outremont High School he took part in athletics and musical activities. He is the brother of Bena, aged eleven years.

● Samuel Bronfman, chairman of the project Beth Hatfuzoth, The House of Jewish Communities, announced the appointment of Dr. Moses Cyrus Weiler, of Haifa, Israel, as chairman of its administrative committee. Mr. Bronfman, at Stockholm, was appointed chairman of the project to build in Israel a centre which would act as an institute in the development of studies of Jewish communities the world over, and where seminars, conferences, assemblies and lectures would be given on the role of various Jewish communities. His committee plans for the dissemination of information about Beth Hatfuzoth. Dr. Weiler, born in Latvia, studied in religious and secular schools there and was sent to Palestine at the age of 16 where he enrolled in the Herzlia Gymnasium in Tel-Aviv, then the first modern school employing Hebrew as its medium. Upon graduation he came to the United States and enrolled in the Dropsie College for Hebrew and Cognate Learning, in Philadelphia, Pa., at the invitation of the late Dr. Cyrus Adler, president of the College. He also completed studies at Delaware University before entering Hebrew Union College where he was ordained in 1933. In the Union of South Africa he was the founder of Progressive Judaism. He holds the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from Hebrew Union College in recognition of his services there. Dr. Weiler left South Africa three years ago and is the third member of his family to start life anew in Israel. At the turn of the century, his grandfather emigrated to Palestine at the age of 81 years. Later his father, also a rabbi, settled in pre-state Israel and became one of the first industriallists there. Dr. Weiler is a graduate student in Judaic studies at the Hebrew University where the South African Union of Temple Sisterhoods and the South African Chapter of the Friends of the Hebrew University, of which he was chairman, established a scholarship fund in his name. Mr. Bronfman said that Dr. Nahum Goldmann, chairman of the World Jewish Congress, invited Dr. Weiler to take on active interest in World Jewish Congress matters, since he had long been interested in its work. Dr. Weiler, will leave this month for South America where he will interest the leaders of South American Jewry in this proposal. He will then go to the communities of Europe. The leadership of the U.S. will be approached later for support of the Beth Hatfuzoth.

Historic 16th Century Remo Cemetery At Cracow Is Being Restored By J.D.C.

Echoes of 400 years of Jewish life in Poland, echoes both tragic and proud, are being evoked as ancient tombstones are uncovered in the current restoration of Poland's oldest Jewish cemetery, the historic Remo Cemetery at Cracow, which dates back to the 16th century. This is the place where the most venerated of Poland's Jewish religious authorities is buried, Remo, Rabbi ("Reb") Moses Isserles, who died in 1572. (Remo is a contraction, as was the custom, of Reb Moses.) His grave was for centuries, down to World War II, a place of annual pilgrimage for thousands of devout Jews.

Here the leaders of the Cracow Jewish community, the oldest in Poland, and for hundreds of years a center of religious learning, were buried. Other great religious leaders and teachers lie here, men like Rabbi Yomtob Lippman Heller, once Grand Rabbi of Prague and later of Cracow, and noted commentator on the Torah and Mishna, a liberal whose humane decisions on divorce and family law exercised great influence long after his death in 1654.

Nazism, war, and vandalism have almost completely destroyed the cemetery. Graves were broken into; corpses scattered. The old headstones were overthrown. Many vanished or were damaged beyond recognition. But, somehow, as if by a special providence, the headstone of Remo, Rabbi Moses Isserles, stood as it has for centuries, erect, with iron fence intact around it, shaded by a great oak. Even the gravestone of Remo's brother-in-law, within the fenced enclosure, remained untouched, as if under his protection.

All else had been reduced to chaos. Almost every other headstone had been levelled, or had disappeared, some appropriated for paving stones or buildings. Only a handful of Jewish survivors remain in Cracow today. Of the pre-war Jewish community of 65,000, only 1200 are left. To them it seems miraculous that the only damage to Remo's simple headstone was a piece chipped off the top. The inscription remains intact; by community decision, the missing piece will not be replaced. The epitaph, in Hebrew, reads:

"From Moses to Moses, there was none other like Moses." (This was first written of Moses Maimonides, the great medieval scholar.)

To restore the cemetery, to preserve this fragment of their long history, became a matter of deep concern to the Jews of Cracow. Today they are rehabilitating the cemetery, excavating and re-erecting its headstones, so long buried under the debris and weeds, and rebuilding the breached walls. The restoration is financed by the Joint Distribution Committee, major American agency for overseas Jewish relief, which also aids Poland's remaining Jews with food, medical care, and other services with funds received from the United Jewish Appeal.

The Jews of Cracow have a long history, some 600 years of it. A thriving and influential Jewish community existed there as far back as the 14th century. Despite pogroms and persecution, it survived through six centuries as an important center of religious and philosophical thought, as well as an important center of commerce. (Actually, Cracow's Jews, expelled from the city proper in the 16th century and barred from it for hundreds of years thereafter, lived in Kazimierz, a suburb, which was ultimately absorbed into the city.)

The Remo cemetery, like all of Cracow's Jewish landmarks, is in the Kazimierz quarter, Cracow's ghetto. It dates back to the 16th century. Earlier Jewish burial grounds were obliterated in long-ago pogroms. The Remo cemetery was filled and closed to new interments about 150 years ago.

History, and vanished custom, speak from the headstones, even the echoes of earlier persecutions. Three headstones, in a row of a 17th-century stones, read: "A holy man whom the King condemned to death." Others are ornately carved and inscribed, with inscriptions reminiscent of contemporary epitaphs in the New World, in 17th and 18th century New England. One handsomely carved stone adorned with a pair of Lions of Judah, reads:

"A magnanimous lady, Her memory a blessing, Her generosity known far and wide; A righteous woman, wealthy and high-born, Malka".

The tombstone of Rabbi Heller, known as "Yousafat Yomtob" (Yomtob the Commentator) because of his commentaries on religious writings, has disappeared without a trace.

Rabbi Isserles, who gave the cemetery his name, was famed throughout the Jewish world as an authority and codifier of religious law. His edition, with his own commentary and supplement, of the "Shulchan Aruch" (The Prepared Table), a code for daily living compiled by the Sephardic rabbi, Joseph Caro, shaped religious observance in Poland and Central Europe for centuries. Every spring on the anniversary of his death on Lag B'omer, thousands of the devout made a pilgrimage to his grave. Born in 1510, son of a well-to-do elder of the Cracow community, he served as its Chief Rabbi, and headed a great Yeshiva (religious school), which continued under his name down to the Nazi invasion. In his day, the school's pupils paid no tuition or board; they attended at his expense. Described as a scholar of "many-sided learning and surpassing greatness," as a student of astronomy and history, Remo was the author of ten printed and many unprinted works, primarily elucidations of the Bible and its commentaries.

Also being repaired is the small brick and stone synagogue adjoining the cemetery, built in 1557. Known as the Remo Shul, it is "arched like a cask," with a single central aisle; it is noted for the handsomely carved doors of its ark. And so this quiet place crowded with four centuries of memories, echoing the prayers of uncounted thousands of devout worshippers, will once again be a historic shrine. Of the men and women to whom these memories belonged, the 3,300,000 Jews who lived in Poland in 1939, only a handful remain. But to these survivors, the scarred old headstones which have also survived the terrible years have today a deeper meaning.

EBAN, ISRAEL EDUCATION MINISTER

A year of free kindergarten has been introduced in an effort to ease the transition of children from primitive homes. In addition, subsidized schooling was extended by a system of graded high-school fees based on scholarship and parents' incomes and the scholarship requirements for children from oriental communities were lowered.

State two-year high schools with thirty hours a week of academic study and twelve to fifteen hours of vocational or agricultural training were started in the development areas inhabited by immigrants. Free summer courses were organized for backward children.

Critics of the experiments, which were introduced by Zalman Aranne when he was Minister of Education, said they had lowered the standards. He resigned in March when an impasse was reached on a demand by high school teachers for the right to form their own trade union.

The Teachers Union, dominated by the more numerous elementary school instructors, threatened to disrupt schooling if the high school teachers were allowed to defect, says the New York Times. Mr. Eban's first task will be to try to end this crisis to assure the orderly opening of the school term in September.

Nasser And The Cohens

BY I. BAR-MOSHE, IN THE JERUSALEM POST

There is something odd about Semites turning anti-Semitic. Arab attacks on the Jews have generally centred on their wresting Palestine from the Arabs. In Syria, for example, the Arabic reader, for the first year of elementary school, states on page 36 that "the Jews are enemies of the Arabs. Soon we shall rescue Palestine from them." Page 56 of the same reader reads: "Palestine is a dear Arab country. The Arabs are a strong nation which does not accept subjugation. The Jews are wicked criminals who have invaded Palestine and expelled the Palestinians. We Arab children shall always remember Palestine and shall expel the wicked criminals from Palestine."

On several occasions, the Egyptian President has boasted that his quarrel is not with Israel only but with world Zionism and world Jewry. But on May 7, 1960, he made his first attempt to discredit Jews as such. Talking about American aid to Egypt and the interest the Americans were "extracting" from the Egyptians, he said, "This is aid in the style of Cohen". Soon afterwards, the Egyptian press and radio broadcast a children's programme which contained a long story about the Jew Cohen who lived to extract money from the Egyptian fellaheen until, by some heavenly miracle, nature sided with the poor exploited people. Cohen died and the villagers cried in unison: "Cohen is dead, and God can make every other Cohen in this world die." There followed several programmes in which Jewish characters like Rachel and Levi figured prominently.

The Eichmann controversy has not been fought out in the world along the lines of partisanship in the Arab-Jewish conflict. In the Arab countries too, most of those who defended Eichmann were ex-Nazis. But Egyptian propaganda has gone farther and farther in its anti-Jewish themes. Nasser's allusion to "Cohen" provided a suitable precedent. On May 26 the "Voice of the Arabs" introduced an Algerian poet who recited a long poem, every line of which contained crude curses against the Jews. Recitations from the Koran and sermons have lately drawn heavily on anti-Jewish texts, not a difficult task when we remember that the Koran contains pro and anti-Jewish verses. New songs have appeared on the Egyptian radio in which anti-Jewish themes predominate more than the theme of Palestine. A song introduced on the 14th of June, reads in part:

"We shall trample the Jews underfoot, We shall break their swords, And then where will the Jews go?"

In June, the "Voice of the Arabs" said: "Hitler realized that the Jews were the dirtiest human species. Thus Hitler took up the slaughter of the Jews in order to cleanse the earth from them." A Nasserist weekly in the Lebanon, "Al-Anwar," published a caricature in which Eichmann is sentenced to death because he left so many Jews unslaughtered. Another Nasserist weekly, "Al Sayaad," depicted Cohen, standing this time for American Jewry, as the criminal who should have been gassed to death instead of Chessman.

Where will this lead Nasser? The Jewish community in both Egypt and Syria is very small. In other Arab countries the Jews are definitely small bait. It could be that Nasser has decided on a new anti-Israel line in which anti-Semitic propaganda figures prominently. Recently the "Voice of the Arabs" has increased the number of programmes and speeches which end with the threat of throwing the Jews into the sea and exterminating them to the last man in an Arab "holy march on Israel." But Nasser's Cohen line might also be a latter-day effect of the increasing number of Nazi experts who have found their shelter in Egypt and Syria.

Every student of the Middle East would do well to turn the most powerful light on Nasser's brand of anti-Semitism.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is not sponsored by a group or an organization and which has the distinction of being a member of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

Jewish Labor Committee Urges U. S. To Brand Party Subversive

In a series of letters between Adolph Held, national chairman of the Jewish Labor Committee, and officials of the U.S. Department of Justice over the branding of the American Nazi Party as a subversive organization, Mr. Held responded to a letter from Oran H. Waterman, Chief of the Civil Section of the U.S. Department of Justice, after the latter had written to Mr. Held that the Subversive Activities Control Board could not take action against the American Nazi Party unless the latter can be shown to be under foreign domination. Mr. Waterman also said that branding of the organization as subversive by the Attorney General was still a pending matter, "that has not yet been resolved . . ."

Mr. Held said: "While we understand the procedures which the Government has followed in placing any organization on the Attorney General's list under Executive Order 10450, we trust that the case of the American Nazi Party will be handled most expeditiously." Taking up the point about foreign domination and/or control, Mr. Held wrote:

"More so than in the case of almost any other organization on the list, such as the American Renaissance Party, the K.K.K., the Christian Mobilizers, etc., the evidence on the American Nazi Party is easily available and in fact openly avowed by the organization. The Nazi uniform, the Nazi name, the open pro-Nazi statements are used almost within the shadow of your own office.

"The American Nazi Party does not deny its affinities to German Nazism," Mr. Held wrote and continued: "It wears the uniform designed by the Nazis; it condemns American democratic ideologies in the same tone and with the same alphabet employed by the Nazis; it uses the same salute as the Nazis, and its official insignia is the one designed by the Nazis. We do not know what other evidence is necessary. Certainly these facts alone are evidence stronger than that presented against most, if not all, of the other organizations on the Attorney General's list."

In his letter to Mr. Held, Oran H. Waterman, Chief of the Civil Section, wrote: "Let me again reiterate that the activities of the American Nazi Party are under active study of this Department. I can assure you that this matter is being handled in the most expeditious manner possible."

YOUTH CAUGHT FOR ANTI-JEWISH ACTS

synagogues in Montevideo. After an explosion in a garage where the bombs were made, the Uruguayan police "established that the orders for these acts had come from a notorious Fascist organization in the Argentine, that the Uruguayan group were in secret radio communication with allied groups in the Argentine, Mexico, and Brazil; and that a list of Jewish and liberal institutions to be attacked had been prepared."

The Congress leader urged that the inquiry into anti-Semitism be continued and broadened on an international level, and that in the meantime the Economic and Social Council adopt a recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights; that Governments be urged to request the help of the Secretary-General to organize seminars on "various aspects of the technique for the prevention of discrimination and the protection of minorities, including seminars on the causes and the elimination of prejudice in all its forms."

pronouncements are made. The Jewish vote is an unorganized but potent reality. Assertions to the contrary are inaccurate and misleading and convince nobody, least of all practical politicians and molders of public opinion."

Dr. Neumann voiced the view that "the reactions of American Jews to specific situations and issues are influenced by their own backgrounds, traditions, and sentiments," adding that "this is both normal and legitimate in any democracy."

The Zionist leader further emphasized: "Certain it is that no one can command or 'deliver' the Jewish vote. Nor can their support of any party be taken for granted. It must be courted and won, as is the case with other recognized groups of the American electorate."

In his address, Dr. Neumann also dwelt on issues confronting the Zionist Organization of America. He maintained that "American Zionists must be vitally concerned not only with Israel, but also with the major problems of Jewish life on the American scene", pointing out that one of such major problems is the establishment of a truly representative body to speak on behalf of the American Jewish community as a whole.

"The Council of Presidents", Dr. Neumann said, "has been a useful and successful step in that direction, though it is strictly limited in scope". He voiced the hope that "American Jews have matured sufficiently to envisage the formation of an all-inclusive body of wider scope and on a more permanent basis. It would enhance the stature of our community and contribute to the effectiveness of its collective effort in all fields of Jewish endeavor".

J.D.C. Leader Is In Africa To Survey Jewish Needs

Moses A. Leavitt, executive vice-chairman of the Joint Distribution Committee and an authority on refugee needs, left the United States for an on-the-spot survey of Jewish refugees and Jewish communities in Central and South Africa, it was announced by Edward M. M. Warburg, chairman. As part of his survey, Mr. Leavitt will try to learn what has happened to the 2500 Jews known to be living in the Congo Republic before the recent outbreak of violence. Many Jews are known to have fled to Rhodesia and other neighboring countries, as well as to Belgium. Mr. Leavitt will attempt to ascertain the fate of Jews remaining in the Congo, as well as the needs of those forced to flee, leaving all their possessions behind. The J.D.C. leader hoped to visit Leopoldville and Elizabethville in order to counsel with the Jewish communities there regarding their plans for the future.

The Joint Distribution Committee, major American agency aiding distressed Jews abroad, is carrying on relief, rehabilitation, and reconstruction programs on behalf of Jews in some 25 countries. Funds for these programs are provided chiefly by the United Jewish Appeal.

Mr. Leavitt also went to South Africa for meetings with representatives of the Jewish community, as well as government officials and others. Many Jewish survivors of Nazism and World War Two found refuge in South Africa with J.D.C. assistance. Mr. Leavitt, who is a member of the board of directors of the United States Committee for Refugees, is generally recognized as one of the country's outstanding authorities in the field of overseas relief and emigration problems.

The J.D.C. leader also served by appointment of President Eisenhower on the "President's Committee for Hungarian Refugee Relief." He was for four years chairman of the American Council of Voluntary Agencies for Foreign Service, and since 1958 has been honorary chairman of that group. Last month he received the Mordecai Ben David Award of Yeshiva University, in New York, for his work on behalf of refugees. Mr. Warburg also announced that in Mr. Leavitt's absence Herbert Katzki, assistant director-general for overseas operations, normally stationed in Geneva, Switzerland, has been assigned to J.D.C. World Headquarters, 3 East 54th Street, New York.
